

Current system makes no sense

The Guardian (Charlottetown) · 12 Dec 2015

As a rural resident living in an unincorporated area of P.E.I., I welcome changes to our current municipal system. I live only four kilometers outside St. Peter's Bay and we are not part of the municipality, despite accessing services offered by the community for many years. It seems only fair that those who access services equitably contribute to them.

I see strong value for change for those of us living in unincorporated areas. As it stands right now, we have no voice should someone buy land and choose to build or develop their land in a way that doesn't make sense for the community and negatively impact property values.

Our current system no longer makes sense and is not sustainable. Rural residents have many common interests and we need to ensure that there is an opportunity for our voices to be heard by all levels of government.

As we move toward a new system, I look forward to having the opportunity for collaboration and consultation to explore new options that work for all Island residents. Sara Roach-Lewis, Cable Head
